The Zanzibar Islands are arguably a year round destination. However, undoubtedly the best time to travel is during the dry months from December to February and June to October. While the weather is dryer one also has to content with the occasional monsoon. The rule of thumb when planning a trip to Zanzibar is to stay on the southwest coast during the Northeast Monsoons (November to March) and on the northeast coast during the Southwest Monsoons (June to October).

Visa Requirements

- Valid passports are required for entry into Zanzibar.
- Ensure that your passport is valid for at least six (6) months after your departure from Zanzibar.
- European passport holders do require visas.
- South African passport holders do require visas.

destination overview

Location:

The islands of Zanzibar are located about 40km off the coast of East Africa roughly 6° south of the equator and about 35km northeast of the Tanzanian coastal city of Dar es Salaam.

Geography:

The Zanzibar Islands are made up of several small islands and two larger ones. Unguja - more commonly known as Zanzibar Island, is the largest, while Pemba to the northeast is a little smaller. Unguja is roughly 85km long and 20km to 30km wide. Pemba is 75km long and 15km to 20km wide.

History:

For 2000 years before the first European settlers arrived, the Arabs, Indians and Persians visited and traded along the East Africa coastline, including the Zanzibar Islands. The Portuguese arrived in the latter 15th century while looking for a trade route to India and established a trading station on Zanzibar Island. Their presence all but came to an end when the Omani Arabs ousted them at the end of the 17th century. Under Arab rule Zanzibar became a centre of the slave trade in East Africa with significant trade and political power. During the second half of the 19th century (from 1840 to 1888) became a focal point for European explorers and adventurers like Livingstone and Stanley who often began and/or ended their expeditions from Zanzibar. Zanzibar was a British Protectorate from 1890 to 1963, when it gained independence. The Sultan was overthrown in 1964 and Zanzibar and the newly independent state of Tanganyika formed what is now known as the United Republic of Tanzania.

Government:

Zanzibar is actually a separate state within the United Republic of Tanzania, where the Revolutionary Council and House of Representatives govern the islands.

Population:

The population is estimated at roughly 1 million people, most of whom are of African Shirazi or Swahili origin. There are also smaller populations of inhabitants from India, Pakistan and Europe.

Languages:

The official language is Swahili, or Kiswahili as it is referred to locally. English and Arabic are also spoken.

Religion:

Islam is the dominant religion, but Christianity and Hinduism are also practised among the minority populations.

Economy:

Based heavily fishing and agricultural exports, however tourism's contribution is growing rapidly as more and more travellers visit the islands.

Currency:

The Tanzanian Shilling (Tsh)

Weights and measures:

The metric system is used.

Being situated just 6° south of the Equator just off the Indian Ocean coast of East Africa means the islands of Zanzibar enjoy a warm equatorial climate with reasonably constant daytime temperatures of 26°C. However, they are subjected to the seasonal monsoons and it is important to know when these are and plan accordingly.

At a glance:

- Equatorial climate with heavy rainfall from March to end May.
- November to March is generally the hot and humid time of the year with temperatures often above 30°C. Rainfall is limited to short bursts.
- April to June is the monsoon period characterised by torrential rainfall.
- July to October is probably the most pleasant time to visit Zanzibar. The temperatures average 25°C and there is little rainfall.

Monsoons:

- The northeast monsoon winds blow from anytime in November to March.
- The southwest monsoon winds blow from June to October.

Seasons:

The monsoons and the rainfall determine the seasons on the Zanzibar Islands. There is very little variation in temperature which might otherwise define the typical winter and summer. Temperatures on the islands vary between 26°C and 28°C with Pemba being slightly cooler and often wetter than Zanzibar Island.

Temperatures:

- Summer - Average temperature on Zanzibar Island is about 28°C. The hottest months are from December to March.
- Winter - Average temperature on Zanzibar Island is about 26°C.
- Cooling sea breezes and trade winds relieve the humidity on the coastal areas throughout the year.

Rainfall:

The main rains fall anytime from mid-March through to the end of May each year. There is a second much shorter rainy season in November.
